It may still be a couple weeks before Thanksgiving, but that doesn't mean we can't start daydreaming about our favorite holiday foods. So, we wanted to know: "What is the best Thanksgiving dish and why?"

Your answers

"Traditional homemade stuffing. Skip the potatoes and just pour the gravy onto it!" — Amy Crume

"Sweet potato casserole!" — Beth Emry

"You cannot beat Turducken: Chicken inside a duck inside a turkey. Google it! It is the best." — Craig Nelson

Our answers

“My husband and I love Thanksgiving for its opportunity to splurge. When we were new to one another and broke, we still scraped together the means for a big holiday meal. We were in a new town, had no family nearby and still went all out with stuffing, turkey, casserole, potatoes and pie. We ate Thanksgiving dinner for days, but what was gone first was the pecan pie. I make the crust and he makes the filling. It’s a fabulous treat served warm with ice cream.” — Jill Bond

“Thanksgiving has always been a time for a family gathering complete with turkey and all the trimmings and a baked ham. My favorite dishes were always candied sweet potatoes just because it seemed like it was the only time we had the dish was during the holidays. My other favorite has always been minced pie with whipped cream topping to be enjoyed while watching the annual Chicago Bears and Detroit Lions football game.” — Ken de la Bastide

“Thanksgiving is one of my favorite holidays, and the food is a main reason why. So many great dishes it’s hard to choose a single one. My wife has figured out a cranberry recipe which uses orange juice which is insanely good. Stuffing and gravy are a must, of course. I love meat, so the turkey would probably have to be my choice for favorite. Also, dark meat is the best; the debate is over.” — Rob Burgess
